Trajectories of resilience in young researchers' careers by Chiara Ruini, Clinical Psychologist at the University of Bologna

Content: Stemming from the psychology of well-being research, the contribution will describe the role of positive emotions, self-determination and personal realization in buffering the stress of early career stages in academic domains. These contexts are characterized by high levels of competition, internal and external pressures to publish and uncertainty about the future. Current research in psychological resilience has documented that these challenges can be overcome by promoting adaptive coping strategies, such as a strong sense of purpose in life and a flexible cognitive style. The presentation will illustrate some of these approaches to promote the resilience of young researchers.

10.15 – 10.30 Coffee break

10.30 – 12.30 Early Career Colloquium

Each session comprises a limited number of research proposals, each consisting of a 15-minute presentation, a 5-minute discussion by nominated discussants, and 10 minutes for Q&A (thus, a total time of 30 minutes per proposal).

Presenters should send their PowerPoint files by Nov. 29th by 1.00 PM to paola.canestrini@unibo.it
